“With ‘HyperMotion Technology,’ we have managed to gather a wealth of data on the movements of human beings,” explains a FIFA Technical Lead. “It’s true we needed the ball, but it was the movements of players that inspired the technology behind it.” Those movements are transferred to the player with a fit that requires no artificial intelligence and no scripted AI routines. FIFA players don’t have to teach themselves to play as they do. Their movements are physically modelled, and each player has their own unique, real-life model of their physical and technical attributes. “We look at player data and what they actually are doing on the pitch,” says a Technical Lead. “We can then interpret how they are running, how they are turning, how they are running with the ball at their feet and heading into space, or what they are doing on the receiving end of the pass.” The Technical Lead then gives the player his own unique model. “We put that on top of the dynamics, and the unique, real-life characteristics of the player. So if you are a fast, fit player, you can be built up as a fast player who is fast, but also a good, agile player, a left-footed player, a left-footed player who’s always looking to get up and move forward, and work off the ball, and generally be quick.” The Technical Lead has 3D models of the players’ whole body – arms, legs and torso. They are combined with data from a football’s trajectory, ball physics, ball and player contact reaction and acceleration. “We also model their real-life attributes such as weight, strength, power, stamina and their strength, balance, agility and reaction times, all of which are then applied to the player.” A player’s physical traits are applied physically. “We don’t have to try and model everything and then make it physically correct,” explains the Technical Lead. “We put a model of every player on top of the real-life player. We start with a virtual model of that player, and then lay it on top of a virtual model of the pitch. So, what we’re seeing is the player on top of the pitch, and then we’re applying that to the player.◆

FIFA is an award-winning series that broke new ground by revolutionising sports video games. Driven by an authentic and realistic brand of football, FIFA has become the best-selling football video game in history, with more than 300 million sales worldwide. Every year, FIFA is celebrated with millions of players lining up to try their hands at the ultimate skill-based test of teamwork and individual brilliance – football. EA SPORTS™ FIFA 22 provides the most authentic experience through our new Attitude Engine powered by Frostbite, which brings fully interactive players to life and enables them to behave, move and even create and destroy footballs with total control. The game also features the most intuitive control system with new dribbling and shooting mechanics, improved mechanics and controls, including 40 new skills that represent real world stars. Additionally, new attacking systems enable players to create and unlock different ways to score, including a suite of new goalkeepers, tricks and traps. In FIFA 22, individual players have been upgraded across the pitch with new control schemes, attributes, skills and behaviours, giving them a unique playing style and personality while also setting them apart from their opponents. In addition, contextual actions will better contextualise your movements during the course of a game, enabling players to react and respond to both teammates and their opponents. EA SPORTS™ FIFA 22 brings a number of new features to the life-like experience. FIFA Ultimate Team, the most popular mode in the series, will be available in an entirely new avatar creator – footballers all over the world have had their own distinct looks in the past, and now you can create your own ultimate team. With the new 'Choose Your Fantasy Style' feature, you can create and customise a kit, shorts, boots, gloves, socks, scarf and hairstyle to reflect your exact style. This will also allow you to customise your Ultimate Team squad even further by adding more elite players in your squad to represent the latest kit and style trends. Additionally, up to four friends can team up and play together online in 4-player co-op and various other modes. New Players and Skills There are eight new star players featured in FIFA 22, each with unique play styles and traits: Dries Mertens Dries Mertens is the GOALKEEPER. A dribbler with a powerful shot and instinctive shot-stopping abilities. Mertens can control the flight and direction of the ball with his feet and head bc9d6d6daa
